May 26-28, 2017, tribal people, friends and clean water supporters, raced from the Pacific Ocean in California, to Klamath Falls, Oregon, in an annual relay run to raise awareness for Klamath River Salmon, and to oppose a proposed pipeline that threatens clean water, people, and fish- The LNG (Jordan Cove) Pipeline.

Runners came from California and across Southern Oregon for the 15th annual Salmon Relay Run, a three-day journey following the path normally taken each year by spawning salmon back to tributaries of the Klamath River. People run for days in shifts, passing a female and male carved wooden salmon as relay batons.

Tribal people and supporters from across the region run because the fish can no longer travel the path they once came. Since 1917, four dams have blocked their way home for the past century... The Iron Gate Dam, Copco 1, Copco 2, and JC Boyle Dams were built with NO fish passage!  (Article continued on page 2...)
Clean Water Threatened...

There was an added cause behind the 2017 Run beyond raising awareness to dissipating fish habitats and salmon counts, as tribes and others stand in lockstep to oppose a proposed liquefied natural gas pipeline that would extend from Malin to Coos Bay crossing several locations and the Klamath and Rogue Rivers.

The run began at the mouth of the Klamath River on Yurok Tribal Lands, progressed through Northern California past the Iron Gate Dam, Copco 1, Copco 2 Dams, and JC Boyle Dam; which have prevented salmon from reaching natural spring migration spawning grounds at the Klamath, Wood, Sycan, and Sprague River’s sources since 1917, when all four dams were built illegally without the mandated fish ladders.

More than 200 people participated along the journey in the roughly 300-mile run, to gain awareness of the plight of Klamath River fisheries. A proposal is already underway which may see the long-awaited return of salmon to Klamath County. Pacific Power recently submitted an application for surrender of the lower four Klamath Dams to be removed in 2020, a proposal currently under review by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC). Removal of the dams would lead to improvement of fish populations, habitats and overall water quality, spurring the possibility of spawning salmon’s return.

While the dam removals would be considered a big win, a new threat has emerged to river health and fish populations, according to Tribes and others along the Klamath River. The Jordan Cove Liquefied Natural Gas Pipeline wants to connect existing natural gas pipelines to a hub located near Malin, then proceed to the Oregon coast (Coos Bay) for shipment to international markets.

300 Mile Salmon Run- Protecting Our Children's Future...

This year marked the 15th time the tribes and others have coordinated the annual Salmon Relay Run, a three-day venture along the Klamath River, which ended Sunday, May 28, at the Klamath County Fairgrounds where the Klamath Tribes’ annual Memorial Day Powwow was being held. This year, the Klamath Tribes' was especially proud of tribal youth, Aisha Wilson (pictured below in the gray shirt with her family and several powwow staff.) Ashia coordinated the 2017 Memorial Powwow. She is also a member of the Klamath Tribes Youth Leadership Council. Thank you Ashia for all your hard work and leadership.
“We are working so hard to restore our river, we cannot let the progress we are making on dam removal be diminished by yet another destructive energy project,” said Annelia Hillman, a Yurok Tribal member who is part of the annual run and other clean water events.

The run began in 2003, established by four Hoopa High School students, to raise awareness about the lower Klamath River fish kill the previous year that left over 60,000 adult salmon dead.

Diminishing fish populations and dam constructions have had direct impact on regional tribes, from Yurok tribal members pledging to have no commercial fisheries this year due to low salmon counts, to the Klamath Tribes utilizing only trout now for subsistence use, due to salmon runs ending a century ago, and the endangered c'waam (sucker fish) being on the endangered species list since 1986.

Following the ceremony, the Salmon Runners, (which featured runners of all ages and several youth from the 4 River Tribes: Hoopa, Yurok, Karuk and Klamath), completed the run up the Klamath River, arriving in Klamath Falls, where they was greeted by the powwow committee and danced in the grand entry. Afterwards, the committee fed all the youth and visitors who participated in the run.

The culmination of the run is a spiritual return of the salmon to the Klamath Tribes area, even if the fish can no longer physically complete the journey. “We have not had salmon here for over 100 years, this led us to rely more on the resident c’wam, or sucker, which also faces extinction because of a century of poor water management,” said Don Gentry, Klamath Tribes chairman.

Since the Run’s inception, the cause has stayed the same, we pray for clean water and THE RETURN OF THE SALMON for FUTURE GENERATIONS.
Don Gentry, chairman of the Klamath Tribes, looks out at the point where the Sprague and Williamson Rivers meet in Chiloquin, Oregon behind the Klamath Tribes main administration headquarters.

CHILOQUIN — Don Gentry, chairman of the Klamath Tribal Council, isn’t shy about defending the water claims made by the Tribes to divert water on the Williamson and Sprague River systems in mid-April 2017, nor in explaining the justification behind them.

According to Gentry, the Klamath Tribes made the request for water to provide for maintenance of the streams, riparian areas and the lakes to provide for fish and other resources valuable to the Tribes. He sat down with the Herald and News paper reporter, detailing the ins and outs of the Tribes’ water rights—dating back long before the Treaty of 1864. The agreement was signed by the Klamath Tribes and the U.S. Government, in an effort to preserve their water right for the years that followed.

The treaty allows the tribes to hunt, fish, trap, and gather on former reservation land, and according to a court case Gentry cited, the water is necessary to maintain those activities. “We have a right to treaty resources and we have a right to water to provide for those. That's a long-standing legal precedent that’s been affirmed in the courts,” Gentry said.

Ranchers in the upper basin have criticized the call, claiming they will have a short window to irrigate and water their cattle this spring, and they have no water available the rest of the summer. Some believe this call could put them out of business.

Gentry commented that while the wet weather throughout the winter and early spring has been helpful, the result of consecutive dry years in the Klamath Basin means there’s a need to recharge water systems.

“A lot of the riparian area sort of acts as a sponge,” Gentry said. “It takes a while to recharge the system and actually a lot of our systems are spring-fed. The water flows right out of the ground, and some of those springs with many years of drought, they’re not flowing at the levels that they would typically flow. So that affects surface water.”

The request for water by the Klamath Tribes could run through May 31, according to Gentry, and is subject to change. “When we put our claims together, we knew that it was apart of regular stream health and channel maintenance,” Gentry said. “It's not only for maintaining water at certain levels, it's for the habitat and other riparian species that are important to the health of the stream … To provide for those other species, flooding is a part of that.”

Gentry emphasized that Oregon Water Resources Department (OWRD) is justified in validating the water claims, but are not giving the tribes new rights. Instead the state is validating long-standing rights already in place.

“A lot of this flows clear back to the treaty in 1864,” Gentry said. “That was negotiated through provisions and opportunity in the Constitution of the United States, article six. Our treaty is just as valid as the Constitution of the United States."

“He acknowledged the concern and impact to Upper Basin irrigators as well. “I can see there's an impact on the agricultural community,” Gentry said. “I don't want to marginalize that one bit.”

Gentry then cited a court case, which he said affirms the right of the tribes to keep water in-stream to provide for treaty resources and maintain a modern standard of living. “After all these years, with our tragic history, and the things that have been imposed on us, we are not the bad guys, we're simply protecting the remnant of what we have left.”

The Tribal Community Input Questionnaire for the Klamath Tribes Strategic Action Plan is now available on our website Home Page at: www.klamathtribes.org

The Klamath Tribes are initiating a Tribal strategic planning process to develop a three-year Klamath Tribes Strategic Action Plan that will identify Tribal priorities and goals. The strategic planning process is anticipated to be a 6-9 month inclusive process that incorporates the input and knowledge of Tribal Council, Tribal members, Tribal government, staff and Tribal enterprise staff.

The questionnaire will provide guidance in developing the plan. Please go to the website, or your can download the questionnaire, print and mail to:

1954 Litigation Fund Update

The remaining balance of this fund which was $396,281.13 as of August 10, 2016, plus accrued interest, remains at the BIA Northwest Regional Of-ce. The Klamath Tribal Council has requested that the BIA Distribute the funds to the 1954 Enrollees and their heirs. The Bureau had planned to contract with Betty Scissons, a retired BIA employee who was familiar with the Klamath Accounts to perform the distribution, but before they were able to execute the contract the in-coming Trump Administration placed a hiring freeze on the federal agencies. The Regional Office stated that the lack of adequate staff could delay disbursement of the funds for up to two years. This item could be further complicated by the reassignment of Stanley Speaks, BIA NW Regional Director to the Southwest Region and a new Regional Director assigned to our area.

The Tribal Council was directed by the General Council to seek repeal of the Judgement Fund Act by Congress. Repeal language has been developed and introduced into committee by Senator Merk-ley’s office. This issue is scheduled to be heard in Committee on July 12, 2017 and could be final as early as the Fall of 2017.

2017 Legislative Commission on Indian Services Spring Celebration Held May 18, 2017 State Capitol, Salem Oregon

Dear LCIS Members, Tribal leaders & Tribal and State agency key contacts:

Thanks to all who attended & participated in the LCIS/9 Oregon Tribes Spring Celebration at the State Capitol on May 18th. Special thanks to LCIS Members, Tribal Leaders, Tribal Representatives--and especially--the Grand Ronde Head start preschoolers who came with their teachers & danced with their canoe paddles and sang in their language. We were so honored to have so many young people from so many Oregon Tribes sitting together on the House steps during the program in the Capitol Rotunda. Thank you to all the Tribal Youth Council Ambassadors and other Tribal Youth who made the day so memorable.

Thanks to the Tribal Leaders, State officials, and Legislators who joined us: Speaker of the House, Tina Kotek, the Oregon Attorney General, LCIS Members and Tribal Chairs for sharing their thoughts on the day's theme: "Sharing Traditions: We Teach Our Children to Build Strong Tribal Nations." Thank you to LCIS Vice Chair & Cow Creek Chairman Dan Courtney for introducing several speakers including 3 LCIS Legislators: Senators Ted Ferrioli & Roblan as well as Rep Caddy McKeown -- each of whom shared their perspective on the importance to all Oregonians of respecting & learning from the traditions and lifeways of those who have lived on these lands and by these waters since time immemorial.

Over eighteen state agencies attended the Spring Celebration including the Director and key contact from Fish & Wildlife, the Deputy State Forester & 3 ODF staff, the tribal affairs directors for OHA, Dept of Education, DHS and OYA, representatives from the Youth Development Council and key contacts from Water Resources, Ag, Dept of Corrections, the Military Dept, HECC, the State Historic Preservation Office and the Department of Geology & Mineral Industries. There were staff from the Governor's Office, the Attorney General's office, the Secretary of State's and Treasurer's offices as well as legislative and other Capitol Building staff.

Special thanks to the Oregon Governor, Kate Brown, signing a Proclamation declaring May 20-27 American Indian Week in Oregon. The Proclamation is downloadable from our website: www.oregonlegislature.gov/cis.

Klamath Tribal Chief Judge Jeremy Brave-Heart brings Oregon Court Learning Process to Chiloquin High School

Chiloquin, Ore. – May 2, 2017, the Oregon Court of Appeals was on site visiting Chiloquin Jr./Sr. High School. Leadership students had a rare opportunity to see how Oregon’s judicial system runs when they came to the school. Students was able to hear oral arguments in three separate court cases. In addition, they heard from each judge and the attorney’s handling each case about their careers, schooling, and choice of profession.

Both Klamath Tribes, Clerk of the Court- Michele Lyons, and Chief Judge- Jeremy Brave-Heart were on hand throughout the day for facilitation and assistance.

Jeremy Brave-Heart, Chief Klamath Tribal Judge, said, “Bringing the process into the ‘real world’ for the Chiloquin students helped them see, in person, how governments actually work. By being able to meet with and interact with the Judges, they were able to form new ideas and thoughts.” He added, “It also allowed them eyewitness access to a legal process that very few people get to witness, and allowed their young and bright minds to see how seriously all governments and courts affect the core of who we are as human beings: Our liberty.”

Klamath Tribes Chief Judge Jeremy Brave-Heart initiated this process by first coordinating directly with Judge Ortega, and then with Chiloquin High Principal Denise Brumels to bring the appellate court to Chiloquin. Following the hearings, the Judges and the Chiloquin Leadership class had an informal lunch where students could talk openly and ask more specific questions of the Judges and each case. Meet Ron Busby- Klamath Language Teacher

When my mother (Barbara Barfield from Chiloquin, Oregon) got her termination payment, she and my dad left the Klamath area. I grew up north of Corvallis, Oregon. I went to Crescent Valley High School and graduated in 1975. I started at OSU in 1980 and transferred to U of O in 1982. I again transferred to the University of Hawaii-Manoa where I graduated with two bachelor degrees. I spent 4 years in graduate study there and was accepted into the PhD. program at the University of Pennsylvania, but had to leave the school 4 weeks before I completed my Master’s degree. While at the University of Hawaii, I started a program in the languages of India. I completed the program in South Asian languages and literature. I’ve lived in India, Singapore, Malaysia, Indonesia and Thailand where I taught and learned.

When I came back to the United States, I lived with my mother who was experiencing health issues. After my mother died, I began to work for the Tribe in 2007 part-time as the maqlaqs guy. After a couple years, there were a couple of young ladies who were in danger of not graduating because of their math class. Since they needed that credit to graduate from high school, I started tutoring them. After they graduated from high school, the director of Education, asked me to tutor full-time. So I tutored math at the high school and other schools in Klamath County for about 5 years.

I am now the Klamath Tribes Culture and Heritage Department Language Instructor. The Klamath Language is a very learnable language and with some effort by motivated people, we will soon have numerous Klamath speakers.

So I will issue a challenge: If you’ve always wanted to speak Klamath, now is the very best time to do so.

The Klamath Tribes
Gathering Place - Community Center

Who We Are...
The Klamath Tribes (Gathering Place) Community Center, is a separate facility located on tribal lands near Chiloquin, Oregon, and is home to several programs that provide many services and activities to Tribal Members and others living in the Chiloquin Tribal Community.

The new community center — a 7,444-square-foot, $2.1 million project, funded by two grants (ICDBG and NAFASDA) — is completely debt-free and was opened and dedicated in late 2016. Two departments have relocated to the center: Culture & Heritage and the Elders Program. The center is used for program services and community needs, such as:
- Powwows
- Weddings
- Graduations
- Elders Med Site
- Cultural Activities
- Tribal Funeral Services
- Elder Culture and Craft Classes
- Klamath Tribal Youth Council Meetings
- Chiloquin Area Community Meetings

Klamath Tribes New Child Development/Day Care Center

(Our Children are Our Future)

After years of dedication and planning, the Klamath Tribes officially opened our first-ever Child Development/Day Care Center in November 2016. We are proud to announce the 2,400 dollar center is completely debt free, and was funded by two grants (ICDBG and NAFASDA).

Currently, our 6,380 square foot, state-of-the-art facility provides direct high-quality, center-based care for children, ages 12 weeks to 12 years old. Aspects of the tribal culture decorate the interior and exterior of the building, including a blue river walkway, that highlights the important significance of amo (water) to the Klamath tribal people.

The new classroom facility has created 8 new jobs and is committed to our children’s early learning and educational development. We recognize there is nothing more important than our nanukos (children). We understand we live in a close knit, family-oriented community, and we believe our new facility will enhance the lives of not only our children, but also support the parents that use our center, we are dedicated to holistic healthy families.
